A lovely week in school this week where we celebrated National Poetry Day. The children in key stage two had a live poetry workshop with Ian Bland – writer and performer. Thank you to Mrs Redmond for organising. It is always an inspiration to be part of the creative process of poetry writing; the children had lots of fun writing their own poems.

This week, we have been trialling a new system for the children when entering school first thing in the morning. The teacher or teaching assistant is in class and the children can enter school and begin their learning straight away. We have found this has been a more focused start to the day; children have come into school calmly and settled quickly. Teachers will and teaching assistants alternate who stays in class and who comes out onto the playground, so that parents/carers do have the opportunity to speak to the adults working with their child if they need to. Any feedback on this new system greatly appreciated.
